Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Letters of John Minor Botts, of Virginia, on the Nebraska Question To the Editors of the National Intelligencer: It is my misfortune once again to find myself in a situation which obliges me to take part against many of my best personal and political friends, and upon a subject, and under circumstances that, feeling and believing as I do, it would be criminal on my part to be silent; and, however much I may regret the occasion and the necessity, I must appeal to you, as national men, and conductors of a truly national paper, to allow me the privilege of addressing a few reflections to the people of the South through your columns on a subject of the gravest consequence to their interests. I mean the Nebraska bill, now pending before the Senate, which, from all we can now see, is likely to become a law without a word against it from the South, and by which it is proposed to repeal or declare inoperative the Missouri Compromise of thirty-four years standing and acquiescence in by all parts and parties of the country. It is true I have little now to do with politics, and I am not in position to give influence and currency to what I may say. I have no Congressional seat from which I can speak by authority, but my interest in the settlement of this question as a citizen, and my regard for the welfare of the country is none the less on that account. After the most careful examination of this portentous question, I am satisfied that it is the most mischievous and pernicious measure that has ever...
